WHEAT GROWING.

Bome Points In a Successful Method

With This Crop. I practice mostly a three year rotation of clover, corn and wheat. By Kiser's, this method I get three crops with one plowing and am enabled to grow wheat at the lowest possible cost. If a field is to be plowed for wheat, it Is done as early in the season as possible in order that it may become settled and firmed, and at seeding time have about two inches of fine, mellow | weeks' visit with their son, Ernest, earth on the surface in which to depos-

A Perfect Seed Bod. I am a firm believer in a perfect seed day. bed. Unless you are willing to properly prepare it, you had better let the seed remain in the bin. The wheat plant is very delicate at first, and unless the soil is fine and moist and contains plenty of food within easy reach of the they rootlets the growth is dwarfed and the chances for a paying crop materially lessened. I practice thorough, level culture in the cornfield, and after the corn is cut and put to five in favor of the Stare. into shock take a heavy spike tooth harrow and thoroughly harrow the ground, going in opposite directions until we have about two luches in the surface of fine, mellow earth. Drill afternoon the wheat the same way it was harrowed the last time; by so doing the twenty-nine and one-half cents, per corn stubble slips through between pound for August batter. Number of the drill holds and bothers very little.

Drilling North and South. I also like to drill it north and south tween the drill rows have a tendency to hold the snow and protect the wheat from the west winds. I am also very careful to sow nothing but perfect seed. The wheat plant when it first starts must get its nourishment from the grain until the minute feeder roots are thrown out into the sell to take up evening. food. The larger the grain and the ger will be the plants.

I have tried different dates to sow wheat and have also watched my pleasant and interesting entertainment neighbors. I have found from Sept. 20 is anticipated. to Oct. 1 gives best results, all things considered, writes an Ohio farmer in John Whitney, who came last week from Nashua, N.
